Exchange Traded Fund (ETF)

An exchange traded fund (ETF) is a fund that is traded on the stock market. The market listing means that you can trade fund units in real time and own them for a few seconds, weeks, months or years, depending on your investment strategy. ETFs are traded just like ordinary equities, which also means that you do not need to pay any deposit or withdrawal fees, only the usual brokerage charges. Characteristics of ETFs are that they are traded on an exchange and have a low management fee compared to many other funds and investment alternatives. The same low fee applies to both professional investors and private individuals.

Carnegie Fonder AB is regulated by the Swedish Financial Supervisory Authority (Finansinspektionen). The assets of the fund and the fund company are kept separate, which means the fund's assets are protected in case of bankruptcy of the fund company. From a legal and tax perspective ETFs are investment funds.

The fund company has an agreement with at least one market maker to provide prices on the Stockholm stock exchange in order to assure liquidity.

HQ Material ETF

The HQ Material ETF comprises the largest basic materials companies on the Stockholm stock exchange, such as Boliden, SSAB, Holmen, SCA, Stora Enso, Lundin Mining, Billerud and Höganäs. The sector is influenced by the global economy and prices of commodities (such as pulp, zinc, copper and steel).

These companies are included in the GICS sector 1510 Materials. The index also has liquidity and size regulations.

The index is re-weighted due to any of the following three circumstances: a) on June 1 and December 1; b) if any security achieves a weighting of 20%; or c) fast entry/fast exit. During re-weighting, weightings are set in relation to the market capitalisation of the companies, but no constituent may exceed 15%.
